

The Miner.

The Virginia Chronicle tells of a young Cornish miner named Lean, who went to a fashionable boarding house in Virginia City engaged elegant rooms at $40 per month, paid in advance, and was the landlady's favorite lodger, until one morning he walked into the parlor and astonished her ladyship with the announcement that he had made up his mind to marry her favorite daughter, and had come to ask her consent to the union, but if it was withheld he should marry her all the same, as they had both determined upon it let the consequences be what they might. The old lady flew into a passion, ordered him to leave the house and never return and assigned her daughter to apartments up stairs where she was bid to remain and not come down without permission until her mother should choose to remove the restriction. Thus matters went on for a few days when one morning a Chinese servant came down stairs with such haste as to almost break his bones screaming at the top of his voice that his young mistress had flown out at the window and was gone. The mother hastened up stairs where she arrived just in time to see her daughter's form flitting from one awning to another, leaping large spaces, where they failed to connect closely, until she reached a certain saloon on C. street where her lover had provided means for her descent to the ground, and meeting her there the two proceeded through the saloon and up to B. street where a minister was waiting, and before the old lady, who was hot upon their track, could reach the place they were married. She found that she was too late to prevent the marriage and her next move was to try cure it, by seeking the assistance of the law to have them divorced, but finding that she could not succeed in that sent for them to come home, gave them her blessing, and the same suite of rooms from which she had driven him a week before, and now they are all living happily under the same roof as if the whole affair had been planned by the mamma. Young Lean is steady, industrious, sober and a capital miner, and the Chronicle predicts will make a first rate husband.

THE LOST ARTS.

A great deal of nonsense has been written by magazine writers about wonderful arts which perished with the ancients. To trust in these lamentations of these wiseacres over the "lost arts," one would think we had fallen upon very degenerate times indeed. But none of the wonderful stories are true. Cleopatra, no doubt, was a very fine woman, but she never dissolved pearls in wine. Archimedes was a great man in his day, but he never set fire to the Roman ships with burning-glasses as the fable relates. The ancients had no arts which we do not understand better and practice more skillfully than they did. The humblest Yankee mechanic could teach the polished Greek or cunning Egyptian sciences and arts of which they never dreamed. The ancients did many wonderful things which have not been repeated, but they are only such things as are not worth doing over again. If we had occasion to build such a foolish thing as a pyramid, we should improve on their model in every respect, and instead of keeping 10,000 half-starved slaves at work for twenty years, we should turn it out finished in as many months. If any people nowadays lived as the ancients did, they would be objects for sincere pity, and it would be our duty speedily to send missionaries among them. What a lamentable sight would be a nation of great mental vigor, half clothed and poorly fed, tilling the earth with wooden plows, without soap, pins, friction matches, or India rubber! How queerly would one of our factory girls appear to them! How magical the art of the clockmaker! Beggars nowadays, with regard to the substantial comforts of life, fare better than ancient kings.

An exchange paper says: "Its board of education has resolved to erect a building large enough to accommodate five hundred students three stories high."

The Bank of California has levied an assessment of $10 per share, amounting to $500,000. This, when collected, will make the paid up capital of the Bank, $5,000,000.
